

Just a few words to thank you for the time Maya and I spent with you.

Though the commute was difficult at the beginning, Maya and I adjusted very quickly and started enjoying our daily trip – especially when we started listening to her CDs. Now every morning she wants to come, she gets her hat and heads to the car.

I started seeing some improvements in the way Maya is interacting with us – actually many of our friends who saw her “before and after” are impressed by the change in how she looks at them or greets them. I’ve also noticed that she plays more spontaneously, she goes by herself to get her toys – mostly puzzles. Pointing and choosing from two items were very hard to teach (over the last six years), but were unblocked during the very first weeks. She also takes her shoes off at the front door now and puts her jacket on the hook, she is even starting to participate in cleaning up after meals. After treatment session # 32 Maya said “ je t’aime” to me for the first time ever!!

Several months later we took a family vacation with Maya on a plane and bus without any issues. She was simply blossoming during those 7 days. She is now comfortable swimming and riding a two wheel bike, before she did not have enough balance or coordination to do these activities. She is extremely happy doing these things.

Last week I met with the school, they are all unanimous, “you would think that you’re dealing with another kid” she has changed so much. This year she took part in her class performance where as last year she had to be removed from the program. Another addition I would like to mention to you is the IPADThis is a tremendous tool I’d recommend to every parent who has been struggling with finding a way to engage their kid. Now she understands a great deal more – even things we didn’t suspect that she could understand and she is “very aware” and alert. She has an outstanding memory of people and places – typical, right? But above all she is cooperative on everything, even going to the dentist and before this was a huge mental and physical struggle. This was a big success!!

I can go on with more examples please share this with anyone who it can help or who wants to try hyperbaric oxygen therapy..... I’ll continue to spread the good news.

With my heartfelt thanks for the smiles, encouragements, and great work!!
